

December 21, 2007

COLSA Corporation Receives Northrop Grumman's 2007 World Class Supplier Award

COLSA Corporation has been selected to receive the 2007 World Class Supplier Award from Northrop Grumman Corporation. The award is given to “suppliers who have consistently demonstrated outstanding achievements and support of Northrop Grumman programs.”

Nominated by Mission Systems in Colorado Springs, Colorado, Northrop Grumman submitted the following:

“COLSA Corporation, a Service-Disabled Veteran Owned Small Business located in Huntsville, AL, has been a supplier to Mission Systems for over two years. COLSA provides a broad variety of engineering service and operational support to the Joint National Integration Center Research and Development program. COLSA personnel fill many technical positions that dramatically impact contract success. Their consistent application of sound engineering procedures and proven operational practices, with flawless decision making, is recognized by the customer and contributes very positively to our award fee. COLSA people perform well above expectations, justifying their trusted leadership positions.

“COLSA rates are very competitive. They provide themselves on low cost, high performance, and they have been delivering. COLSA completely complies with the government’s highly prescriptive contract rate tables and have not been impacted by the government-controlled annual rate table escalation. By every measure, COLSA has been a teammate leader in all aspects of financial performance.

“COLSA, from the corporate officer level in Huntsville through their Colorado Springs leadership to the individual performer is positively committed to JRDC excellence. Management dedication to the program is unwavering. Both Northrop Grumman Mission Systems and COLSA are working to expand their role on the program, based on expertise they bring and their track record of excellent performance.”